Annual Academy Exercises Wednesday Feature Dedication of Buildings—Other Events in Usual Custom—Alumni Victorious in Game

The graduation exercises of Gould Academy opened at 10 A. M. with the march of the student body into the William Bingham Gymnasium to the "March of the Priests" by the Gould Academy Band, under the direction of Anton Eugene Mainente. The invocation was given by the Rev. M. A. Gordon of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Bethel. After the march "Army and Navy" by the Band, Rita Salls 39 delivered the Address of Welcome after which the Twentieth Century Banner was transferred by Elizabeth Field '39 to Irving Brown, President of the Class of 1940. Murray Thurston '39 presented the school with a very attractive shield on which the track and field records of Gould Academy athletes may be inscribed. Principal Philip S. Sayles rededicated the Administration Building formerly Academy Hall as Hanscom Hall in honor of Principal Emeritus Dr. Frank E. Hanscom, who was associated with the school as Principal and Principal Emeritus for 40 years. After an appropriate response, Dr. Frank E. Hanscom dedicated the new boys' dormitory as Holden Hall in honor of the Hon. Liberty Holden of the Class of 1853. A flute solo "Concertina" was rendered by Mr. Mainente, accompanied by Miss Claire Tebbets, following which a fantasy in one act "The Man of the Moment" was produced under the direction of Miss Mary Soule of the Speech Department. The cast of characters was as follows: The Spirit of Genius, Lydia Norton; The Little Shadow, Barbara Lyon; The Poet, John Larsen; Shadows, Elizabeth Field, Anne Logofet, Helen Gillis, Gladys Clark, Claire Tebbets. Next came two marches by the band, "Anchors Aweigh" and "National Guard."

The valedictory was given by Helen Lowe, after which the following awards were made: National Honor Society; Helen Lowe, Rita Salls, Murray Thurston, Elizabeth Field, Arlene Greenleaf, Laurice Morrill, Claire Tebbets and Maynard Austin. The name of Helen Lowe as valedictorian is to be inscribed on the Honor Shield, which is the gift of the Class of 1930. The honor of having her numerals engraved on the Scholarship Cup, which was the gift of 1935, was won by the Class of 1939. Helen Lowe, Rita Salls, Murray Thurston and Elizabeth Field, with four-year grades of over 90, will have their names engraved on the Scholarship Shield. The gift of the Reader's Digest, Inc. of one year's subscription to the Reader's Digest goes to Helen Lowe. The Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute Medal for excellence in mathematics and science is awarded to Maynard Austin. The Becker College medal for outstanding work in Commercial subjects was won by Helen Lowe. For outstanding work in athletics medals are awarded to Helen Lowe and Donald Holt; for outstanding work in debating to Anne Logofet and Murray Thurston; and for outstanding work in Dramatics to Arlene Greenleaf. The medal typifying the highest award in athletics for girls was received by

THE NEW HOLDEN HALL— DEDICATED WEDNESDAY

BOYS' DORMITORY DEDICATION

Address of Dr. Frank E. Hanscom at the Dedication of the New Holden Hall

Mr. Chairman, Trustees and Alumni of Gould Academy:

I deem it a distinctive honor to be privileged to speak of Mr. Liberty Emery Holden here in the school which he loved and which honored and respected him. Perhaps a brief resume of his life will be of interest.

Mr. Holden was born amid humble surroundings. Brought up on his father's farm, here in Oxford County in the little town of Sweden, he came to Gould Academy, as hundreds of other boys have come, during the more than 100 years of the school's existence, to lay here the foundation of his life's work. How well he builded in those early years, his whole after life gave conclusive evidence, and when great success had crowned his efforts, his heart turned with love and gratitude to the old school, which gave him inspiration and direction in his forming days.

The story is told that when Mr. Holden was a student at Gould, he was a target for the admiring and languishing glances of the opposite sex, to which he paid little or no attention. One girl a little bolder than the rest, learned and recited for her Friday afternoon declamation, that immortal speech of Patrick Henry, which ends with that dramatic climax, "I know not what course others may take, but as for me, give me Liberty or give me death."

Mr. Holden was a teacher in early life. At the age of sixteen he taught a district school in Chatham, N. H., and while preparing for college and during his college course, he paid his way largely by teaching district schools in Bethel, Maine, and Walpole, Mass., and select, or so-called high schools in Lovell, Denmark and Bridgton. He considered his experience as a teacher invaluable. It settled in his mind a lifelong conviction that all permanent reforms are educational, and that true patriotism is founded on correct education.

DEDICATION ADDRESS BY PRINCIPAL SAYLES

In dedicating the Administration Building as Hanscom Hall, Principal Sayles said:

Principal Emeritus, Members of the Board of Trustees, Faculty, Students and Guests:

I feel that the Board of Trustees have entrusted to me a duty which is a rare privilege, namely, that of honoring a colleague with the greatest honor which is within the power of Gould Academy to bestow.

Down through the centuries it has been a custom to immortalize the most worthy deeds of men by identifying their names with the indestructible works of Man and Nature. Greece and Rome perpetuated the names of gods and men in the stone of temples, carrying out a tradition, which has been observed since that time by all peoples. Nations, cities, cathedrals, structures devoted to civic works, the arts and sciences, education, all bear names of men and women, outstanding in their various fields of endeavor.

As Harvard has her Eliot and Lowell, Columbia her Butler, Williams her Mark Hopkins, so has Gould her immortals, the memories of whose works and personalities time can never dim.

We have first our founder, Daniel Gould, a man of God who, in his later life, transferred his abilities to the field of education. At the behest of several public-spirited citizens of Bethel and with their assistance he founded our Academy in 1836. Thus was born Bethel Academy which seven years later was to take the revered name of her first principal.

Next among our great names comes that of Dr. Nathaniel True, under whose inspired guidance from 1848 to 1861, Gould Academy grew to assume a high place among the Maine Academies. With Daniel Gould does Nathaniel True watch over the students of Gould Academy from their places in the Study Hall.

On the facade of the building in which we are now congregated is inscribed the name of William Bingham II, whose interest and generosity has made possible the new Gould Academy which we now enjoy both in its physical and educational privileges.

Our first dormitory opened for use in 1909, bears the name of its donor, the Honorable Liberty E Holden, whose benefactions to Gould Academy were varied.

Our Students' Home bears the name of Marion True Gehring, who with her husband, Dr. John G. Gehring, were ever staunch friends of and contributors to Gould Academy, adding many benefits, both material and cultural.

In the autumn of 1897 there came to Gould as principal, a young man, Frank E. Hanscom, from the town of Oxford, where had begun that reputation as an educator and administrator which was later to be recognized, not only by our own Academy, but institutions of higher learning as well. Leaving an assured position as Principal of Oxford High School and Superintendent of Schools of Poland and Mechanic Falls, Frank Hanscom saw more than the little building on the small plot of ground on which our Administration Building now stands, and with purpose, vision and strength of heart, and cheerful with the tireless strength of youth, set out upon his new found task, seeing before the year was out his student body grew from 46 to 71, taxing the services of his two assistants, one full time and part time, as well as himself. From then on the future success of Gould Academy was assured, but not, however, without crises and struggles, all eventually surmounted by sheer determinations and the will to succeed. Thus under the leadership of Frank E. Hanscom has Gould Academy grown, not only in size, but in service until today her sons and daughters live the world over, many in high positions, all harking back to the inspiration of their Principal. With the years came recognition when in 1899 Bates College honored Mr. Hanscom with a degree of Master of Arts and in 1907 Bowdoin College did likewise while in 1930 Bates College added further laurels by the conferring of a Doctorate of Education.

And now, as an inspiration to future generations of students, a reminder of kindly service to Alumni and the mark of a true educator to all, will the following plaque be cast for the world to see "Hanscom Hall—In sincere appreciation of four decades of tireless effort, brilliant leadership and keen educational vision of Frank E. Hanscom, A. M., Ed. D., Principal 1897-1936, Principal Emeritus 1936 —."

By authority of the Trustees of Gould Academy, Academy Hall shall henceforth be known to all as Hanscom Hall.

DEDICATION OF HOLDEN HALL

He entered Colby College in 1853, but stayed out during his junior year to earn money by teaching; Then, having decided to settle in the middle west, he transferred to the University of Michigan in the fall of '56 and was graduated with high honors in 1858. That same year he was elected Professor of Rhetoric and Literature in Kalamazoo College, resigning three years later to become Superintendent of Schools in the city of Tiffin, Ohio. He had been studying law on the side, and in 1862 was admitted to the bar and took up his residence in Cleveland. Opportunities for business, especially in real estate, were good, and instead of practising law, he went into business, buying, improving and selling real estate. He was elected a member of the School Board, and for nine years was its President. Mr. Holden once said to me, "I was born to be a teacher; but I fell from grace and went to making money."

Mr. Holden invested in silver and lead mines in Utah, and in 1875 moved there with his family to take charge of his extensive interests. He became identified at once with the educational interests of the territory. He founded Salt Lake Academy, and for 12 years, while he lived in Utah, was its President.

When he first went to Utah, Brigham Young was alive and polygamy was rampant. Before he left, polygamy was abandoned as a tenet of the Mormon Church. As an instance of his convictions and influence, Senators Sherman and Harrison visited Salt Lake City, and while standing with them at the grave of Brigham Young, Senator Harrison said, "Mr. Holden, what is to be the solution of the Mormon problem?" He answered, "Give us a law that will disfranchise polygamists, and the problem will solve itself." The Senator replied, "That is the best suggestion I have ever heard. Come down to Washington next winter and we will put it into a law." He went to Washington as suggested, and assisted in drafting the law which outlawed polygamy.

He returned to Cleveland and was identified with the business, civic and educational interests for many years. He built the Hollenden Hotel, noted for its size and beauty of its appointments. He was one of the founders and trustees of the Case School of Applied Science; but most of his time in later years was given to the Cleveland Plain Dealer which grew under his ownership to be one of the most liberal and influential newspapers in the United States.

Mr. Holden was a lover of art and patron of the arts. He had a very large library and a choice gallery of Old Masters. His home on the shore of Lake Erie was one of the most beautiful places in America. He said that while churches, schools, books and works of art are means of education and culture, a man's home is the best exponent of his taste, character and life.

Mr. Holden was one of the most devoutly reverent men I have ever known. He saw and acknowledged God's handiwork in everything about him. He accepted and held in trust his great possessions as coming from the Great Giver of all Good, whom he thanked daily for all his benefits. He loved life here upon earth; but he possessed an abiding faith in a higher life beyond, where every noble faculty of the soul will go on and on in unending development.

It was my great good fortune to spend an entire week in close companionship with Mr. Holden at his home in Cleveland, and I shall never forget the warmth of his hospitality, the geniality of his companionship and the heart-warming assurances of his friendship. Gould Academy has much to be thankful for in having had this big-souled, generous-hearted man among her alumni and friends, and her students have a rich inheritance in the example which he left them of obstacles bravely surmounted, of battles nobly won, of life honorably lived.

I shall love, always, to remember Mr. Holden, as I saw him last, as he stood with bared head beneath the trees, himself as erect as the stately elm which he planted on Gould's campus, waving farewell to me and my then small son, as the electric car bore us away from his beautiful summer home at Motor, Ohio.

Mr. Holden had faith in Gould Academy, faith in its teachers, faith in its pupils, so many of whom come from the rugged hills of Oxford County, where he was born and bred. He came to the aid of the school at a critical time, providing a home for the Principal, when it seemed necessary for him to go from town in order to secure a suitable home for his growing family. Again, when increasing numbers made it impossible to secure homes, he provided the old Holden Hall to meet the emergency. It rooms for pupils in the village was the purpose and promise of this good man to do great things for Gould Academy; but death intervened before his larger plans were consummated.

In view of all this it seems eminently fitting that the name of Liberty Emery Holden should be enshrined in the archives of Gould Academy, and that the splendid building which has arisen on the campus during the past year should be dedicated and consecrated to the memory of this distinguished alumnus of the institution.

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1939

40 YEARS AGO In the NEWS

May 31, 1899

The G. A. nine, which played at South Bethel yesterday afternoon, was beaten by a score of 16 to 19, which was not strange as the opposing catcher formerly played on the Bridgton Academy team.

Newry Corner—Our friends are in a quandary. Nathaniel Trask cannot move to the farm he has purchased until Mr. Bailey vacates it; Mr. Bailey cannot move to the place he has bought until Mr. Rowe vacates it; and Mr. Rowe cannot move until he finds a rent, which seems to be a difficulty.

"THEY TELL ME"

Remember two or three weeks ago I had a spell about how slick propaganda works, and another one about how expensive wars are. Well I guess everybody agreed with me, they didn't say anything anyway. This time of year, with Memorial Day and all, the uselessness of wars is all the plainer to all who take a minute to think. Most of us can remember the World War and many can't forget the Spanish War, and we all know about the Civil War. If you think only in dollars and cents, it isn't hard to kill every argument for war before it starts. Benjamin Franklin, whose intelligence among Americans is still considered outstanding and phenomenal, wrote to a friend 151 years ago, "When will princes learn arithmetic enough to calculate, if they want pieces of one another's territory, how much cheaper it would be to buy them, than to make war for them." In our Civil War why couldn't the matter have been settled without war, avoiding the suffering of brave men in battle and their just as brave women left at home to struggle through until their soldiers came home if they should be so fortunate. The Spanish War, springing aflame on the supposed destruction of the battleship "Maine." The World War, drawing this nation in on as little real pretext. All needless waste, needless loss of life, needless suffering. Let us honor our heroes, dead and living, who sincerely followed their patriotic duty to their country at great sacrifice. Let us remember that young men in the best physical condition with the best prospects for success in civil life and long lives of peace and happiness in the quiet of their native homeland, will still be the target of war propaganda from a thousand sources. The newspapers, magazines, news reels intentionally or not will continue to turn our heads. Who and what are behind this? Who wants a war anyway? Not the young men and women. Not the fathers and mothers that you can view with alarm these folks secure in the knowledge that they will not be called. These folks that know that business will be speeded up, that they can safely make more money. You can question the sincerity if you will of many a "statesman," politician, and such like. But all that Benjamin Franklin could say, and all the others, would be of no use against a time of propaganda, pretty uniforms, and some old war marches played by a good band. Uncle Hiram

NO STOMACH FOR WAR

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

CORRECT EXPOSURE

The right exposure—corrected for each situation—yields better pictures. For this average subject, on a cloudy-bright day, 1/25 second at f.8 lens opening is correct. On a sunny day, with the same subject, 1/25 second at f.11 is proper.

NOW that spring is here, the days seem brighter as well as longer. This apparent brightness may deceive some of us into shortening our outdoor exposures—but we should be cautious in so doing.

Underexposure is the most frequent fault in amateur snapshots. A picture printed from an underexposed negative has a harsh appearance. The shadows are too black and lack detail, and by comparison the bright areas appear excessively bright. If many of your pictures have this appearance, you should practice giving fuller exposure, either through choice of a larger lens opening or longer shutter time.

Modern films have broad exposure latitude, to take care of reasonable errors in exposure. But we should not ask too much, and we should remember that a correctly-exposed negative always produces the best print. When we are in doubt, it is usually wiser to give a full exposure rather than one that may be too short.

Here are typical correct exposures for the "chrome" type films that most of us prefer for outdoor picture taking:

BRILLIANT DAY: Average subject, 1/25 second at f.11 lens opening; open landscape, 1/25 second at f.16; water or beach scenes, 1/25 second at f.22.

CLOUDY BRIGHT DAY: Average subject, 1/25 second at f.8; open landscape, 1/25 at f.11; water or beach scenes, 1/25 at f.16.

DULL DAY: Average subject, 1/25 at f.6.3; open landscape, 1/25 at f.8; water or beach scenes, 1/25 at f.11.

With box cameras on dull days, a very short time exposure should be given, with the camera on a firm support. This exposure should be made with the second stop opening, and about as fast as you can work the shutter when set for "time." Snapshots can be taken with a box camera on any sunny day or well out in the open light on a cloudy-bright day.

Late in the afternoon, or early in the morning, light is weaker, and exposures should be lengthened accordingly. Form the habit of correct exposure, and your pictures will improve.

Personal Glimpse Of 'Jack' Garner By Old Friend

A rare, intimate glimpse of John Nance Garner, the man, is contained in a column entitled "Perspective," written in News Week magazine by Editor Raymond Moley, former assistant secretary of State under President Roosevelt.

"It's true that Mr. Garner is picturesque," he says. "But he's picturesque only because his method of life, which is simple and natural, contrasts so weirdly with the sham living that goes on in Washington. So far as I can see, he's a man who lives his life as he wants to live it. If he were the manager of a ranch or the president of a bank or the publisher of a newspaper with no possible political ends to serve by 'quaintness,' he would still do just about as he does.

"He doesn't live simply because he wants to get votes. He lives that way because he is a simple man. He refuses to go out to dinners because he wants to go to bed early and get up early. He smokes cigars because he likes cigars. He goes hunting because he likes to hunt.

"The Garner scheme of things shouts to the world: Here I am—no mystery, no deception, just a man trying to do his job. Speaking politically, if that's what you want, O.K. If it isn't what you want, good-by and no hard feelings.

"There's nothing cheap or unreal about all this. No man who's putting on an act can serve in the Congress of the United States for 35 years and still keep the affection and respect of his discerning colleagues.

"Mr. Garner doesn't read an awful lot, except the newspapers. He learns a lot from talking to people. The garden of his mind is carefully pruned.

"Now that it's become fashionable again to salute the flag and stand up when 'The Star-Spangled Banner' is played, it can be said with impunity that no man loves his country with more unabashed fervor than Mr. Garner. If he seems to be less concerned about resounding phrases like 'America's destiny in the world' than some others are, that's because he's so passionately anxious to see America believe in itself. He's convinced of the durability of democracy as a way of life for the American people. He knows that any danger democracy faces in the United States comes not from without but from within—when people grow careless, indifferent, tired.

"Mr. Garner is no nineteenth-century free trader. He believes in protection for American farmers, for American industry. He believes that the concentration of financial power witnessed in the last generation was bad for the country. But, unlike Borah and Brandeis, he doesn't look with horror on big business. He takes the view that probably some businesses are more efficient when they're big and some businesses are better for the public when they're little, and that it's the government's job to try and find out which are which. He profoundly believes that much of the early New Deal legislation was sound, but he shrewdly points to a lack of coherence in its later phases.

"He's for organized labor, but made no secret of his alarm over such excesses as the sit-down strikes: to him, the sit-down strikes were nothing more or less than a forcible seizure of private property. He's against the continuous growth of spending in the government—not only because he sees financial chaos at the end of such a course, but because spending has been accompanied by increasing executive indiscretion.

No man has exercised more power in Congress over the years than Mr. Garner. It is a power that does not rest on patronage. The vitality of his mind, the ripeness of his political judgment, the warmth of his affection, his unfailing, unmitigated honesty have compelled the admiration of Republicans as well as Democrats, of radicals and conservatives, Easterners and Westerners. All this despite the tradition that the Vice Presidency is a role of impotence.

"Mr. Garner has made a throne out of a political sarcophagus."

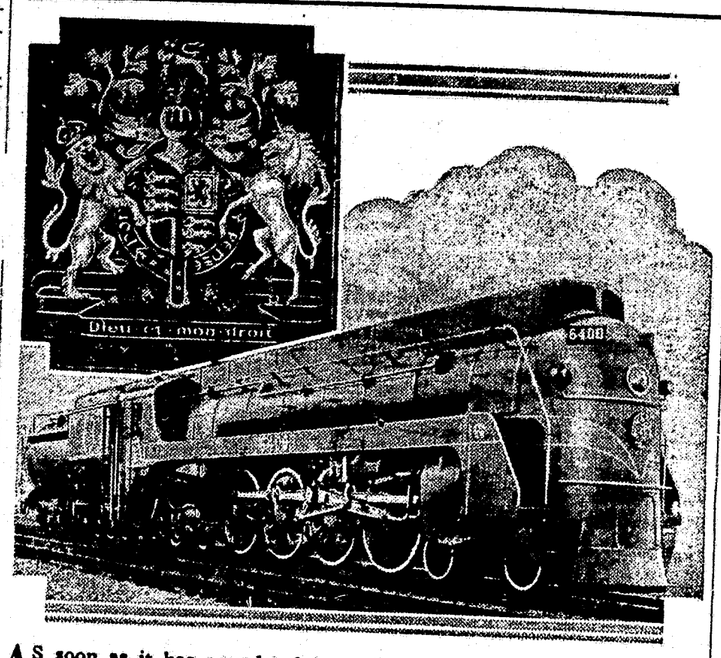
Amethyst Is a Quartz

The amethyst is a quartz of clear purple or bluish-violet color, due to the presence of manganese. The dark reddish-purple is the most highly prized. Wade's "Textbook of Precious Stones" says the chief charm of the Siberian amethyst lies in its large red component, which enables it to change from a deep grape-purple by daylight to a fine red by artificial light that is rich in red rays and poor in blue ones.

Royal Train Engine for New York World's Fair



As soon as it has completed its assignment hauling the Royal Train through Canada the "6400," giant locomotive of the Canadian National Railways, will be sent to New York to be placed on exhibition at the World's Fair. This locomotive was one of five C. N. R. engines used to haul the train carrying King George VI and Queen Elizabeth and the members of their retinue for a distance of 4,212 miles in Canada. It is one of the largest streamlined locomotives in the world. Finished in royal blue and silver to harmonize with the exterior decorations of the Royal Train, and bearing the Royal Coat-of-Arms (inset) in front and on the sides of the tender, the "6400" is a striking and beautiful example of a modern Queen of the Rails.

TRUTH about ADVERTISING

By CHARLES B. ROTH

A MAN NAMED CAXTON

YOU may not remember ever hearing the name of William Caxton, but it was his life which makes your life today comfortable. He it was who introduced printing into England. This was in 1476. The introduction of printing has made all progress possible.

It wasn't until 1638 that America had a printing press, this at Harvard university, but after that printing grew, and newspapers sprang up, and modern American life began.

Charles Roth

The printing press is the forerunner of knowledge wherever it is introduced. The printed word, even to this day, has no rival as a quick means of disseminating vital facts and ideas.

The newspaper of today is one of the modern wonders of the world. It is the broadest, quickest, most flexible and most economical way of getting a message into the minds of the people.

Early in our national history, manufacturers and merchants sensed this power of the press. They began using it to carry their advertising facts and ideas into the homes.

These early advertisers were careful business men. The fact that the newspaper would complete the educational process for their goods wasn't enough. It also had to do the job at less cost than any other medium.

And they found, after many trials in different fields, that it did. It got their message to prospective buyers in a manner which was economical as well as effective.

Today this same condition is unchanged. Advertisers, using newspapers year in and year out, find it the most profitable way in which to tell their story to buyers.

The reason is simple. The newspaper is the great common denominator of modern life. It reaches practically every family. It has the confidence of its readers. It stands for everything which is right and good and modern.

The advertisements in your newspaper are as much a part of its vital importance as the editorial and the news columns.

As a matter of fact, most readers find it hard to tell what interests them most—the commercial news, which is called advertising and which touches their lives every day, or the general news, in news story, editorial and cartoon.

They're both valuable.

This man named Caxton was one of the great benefactors of mankind. He lighted the lamp—and it is still burning bright, though centuries have fled since he lived.
